

ABSTRACT

A graphics chip is described for performing operations required by a display device to generate display images. The graphics chip includes a display controller and an internal frame buffer coupled to the display controller, which is used to store display data. The graphics chip further includes a data copy logic to copy display data from an external frame buffer to the internal frame buffer as the display controller reads the display data from the external frame buffer.